About Us

Over one billion people around the world are impacted by neurological disorders, and nearly seven million people die every year as a result of these debilitating diseases. The IYNA is a global network of students which aims to inspire the next generation of neuroscientists, neurologists, and neurosurgeons to fight neurological disease. Originally founded at the United States National Brain Bee Competition in 2016, we are working to provide opportunities for students to develop their passion for neuroscience into a career. This packet includes further information on our current projects and benefits for our sponsors.

IYNA Journal

The IYNA Journal is a bimonthly publication written, edited, and published entirely by student members of the IYNA. Our journal not only encourages writers to develop their scientific comprehension and communication skills, but also provides an excellent educational resource to readers. As of January 2018, we have published ten editions of the IYNA Journal, each of which contains approximately fifty pages of original student written work. All released editions are available for free at journal.youthneuro.org.

National Chapter System

A country-by-country network of IYNA chapters that supports the learning and activities of our aspiring neuroscientists, neurologists, and neurosurgeons. The IYNA Chapter System connects our global mission to individual communities. This grassroots approach is organized through school or local clubs, with chapters integrated into regional and national chapter networks. By joining a chapter, students have an opportunity to share their passion for neuroscience with their communities.

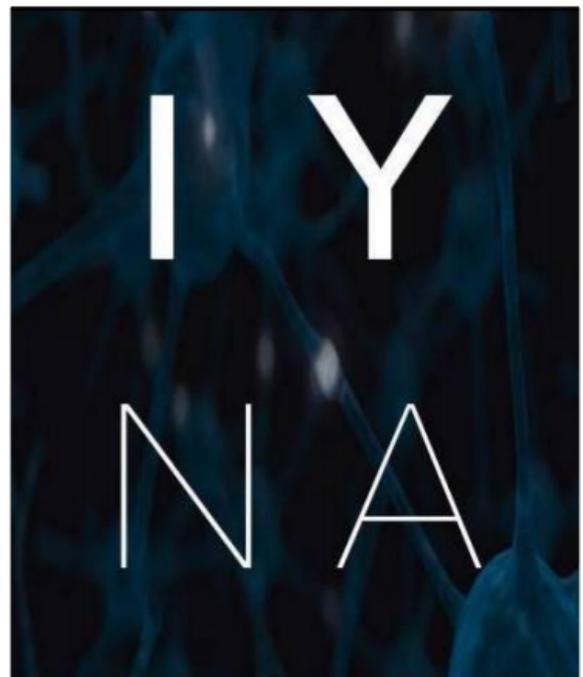

MYELIN

MYELIN (Modern Youth Education, Leadership, and Inquiry in Neuroscience) is a comprehensive curriculum with teaching resources to support a high school neuroscience course, providing students around the world free access to neuroscience education. The curriculum is still in development, but we have already made several key partnerships to ensure that it will meet the needs of students and educators.
